MEET AILEEN

Aileen is 7 years old and lives with her mom, dad and brother in Goleta, California. Her dad is a painter who is typically on the job six days a week—from sunup to sundown. However, some days he works all day and into the night. “Sometimes when my whole family is asleep, my dad is still working,” Aileen says.

Despite the sacrifices her dad makes, it’s tough for Aileen’s family to afford everything they need. In the past, they had to choose between paying for the lights, medical expenses and food. Aileen would ask for a glass of milk, and her dad would have to tell her that she couldn’t have any—knowing that they just couldn’t afford it.

Thankfully, they don’t have to make as many tough choices anymore. At Aileen’s school, they receive groceries from a food pantry served by a Feeding America food bank. The food pantry offers them healthy food, including Aileen’s favorites—apples, carrots and milk.

Aileen’s dad believes that the food pantry is helping him invest in a brighter tomorrow for his children. He wants his daughter to have the chance to graduate college and have a stable career. “Without [the food pantry], I don’t know how we would make it,” he says. “I think the future is going to be better.”

FEEDING AMERICA: FIGHTING HUNGER ACROSS THE NATION

In every state, Feeding America food banks are on-the-ground providing meals where they are most needed. Together, we serve more than 46 million people in virtually every county in America each year.

Our mission is to feed America's hungry through a nationwide network of member food banks and engage our country in the fight to end hunger.

We helped nourish more people than ever before.

This year, we helped provide 4.2 billion meals to people facing hunger. We also expanded our work to include an even greater focus on preventing food waste and accessing more nutritious food for the people we serve. To achieve this, Feeding America worked alongside food banks, helping them enhance their services and accomplish their goals.

We rescued more food from going to waste.

Feeding America forged new partnerships with emerging retail outlets that sell fresh and prepared foods—including stores, restaurants and hotels. We made it easier for these businesses to prevent food waste by launching MealConnect, a technology platform that enables them to donate surplus food at no cost using any device. As a result of MealConnect and other food rescue strategies, we rescued 3.3 billion pounds of food from going to waste. If it had been thrown away, this food would have produced roughly the same amount of greenhouse gas emissions as 170,000 cars in a year.

We helped network members access more fresh produce.

One of our strategies for obtaining more fruits and vegetables involves assisting food banks as they establish regional produce cooperatives across the country. These facilities enable food banks to pool their resources so they can access a wider variety of high-quality produce at a lower cost. Through this model and other impactful produce strategies, we distributed 1.3 billion pounds of fresh fruits and vegetables to people facing hunger.

HELPING PROVIDE NUTRITIOUS MEALS

We distributed a record $56 million in grants to food banks.

These funds, available exclusively to network members, helped food banks invest in general operations, access more food, establish or grow impactful meal programs and reach new milestones in the fight against hunger in their communities.

MOBILIZING ANTI- HUNGER ADVOCATES

With our support, advocates took more than 100K actions to promote hunger-relief policies.

We advanced policies that help alleviate hunger.

Feeding America builds relationships with lawmakers on both sides of the aisle to advocate for change. Our policy recommendations are informed by our unparalleled research and the real experiences of leaders across the network who understand the challenges and needs of struggling households.

At the federal level this year, we testified before the House Agriculture Nutrition Subcommittee to advocate for federal nutrition programs. We also fought for increased government funding for TEFAP (The Emergency Food Assistance Program), which provides millions of meals to food banks. Following these efforts, Congress passed a funding bill that included more than $25 million in additional TEFAP funding.

Our collaboration with thought leaders in government and agriculture helps shape federal policy and connect food banks with key influencers in the food rescue movement. We led discussions on food waste and hunger alongside other top organizations at key events including a House Agriculture Committee Roundtable on Food Waste Reduction, The 2017 AgVocacy Forum and Agri-pulse's Farm Bill Summit.

At the local level, food banks and food pantries advocate to end hunger in their communities. Feeding America develops training programs and resources for network members, strengthening their voices as they speak up for struggling families. We also engage the public in the fight against hunger, providing resources that help people reach out to their representatives and take a stand for households facing hunger.

MOBILIZING ANTI-HUNGER ADVOCATES

We made hunger impossible to ignore through creative campaigns.

Hunger Action Month. In September, Feeding America launched Hunger Action Month™ to mobilize the public to take action on behalf of struggling families. An empty plate served as a powerful icon of the campaign, demonstrating the challenges facing people at risk of hunger and the ways that the public can help. Throughout Hunger Action Month, thousands of Feeding America supporters—including celebrities, nonprofits, companies, politicians and people like you—shared their dedication to hunger-relief on social media. The campaign garnered nearly 500 million impressions and engaged the nation in the fight to end hunger.

Thousands supported Hunger Action Month on social media.

Summer Hunger Campaign. When schools close their doors for the summer, millions of children who qualify for free or reduced-price school meals must suddenly go without. This year, Feeding America launched a multi-faceted summer hunger campaign to spark a national conversation about kids in need across the country. We partnered with Scholastic and Conagra Brands Foundation to develop the Hungry to Help project, offering resources for families and teachers to educate children about hunger and empathy. We also teamed up with Facebook Creative Shop, sending a little ice cream truck across the country to raise awareness of child hunger and highlight the work of food banks along the way via Facebook Live. The summer hunger campaign garnered more than 388 million press impressions and over 15 million online video views. We will leverage these strong results to continue driving awareness of hunger in America.

MOBILIZING ANTI-HUNGER ADVOCATES

We grew support for hunger relief through successful cause marketing campaigns.

Feeding America and our corporate partners launch winning cause marketing campaigns that engage the public in the movement to end hunger. For example, Walmart’s Fight Hunger. Spark Change. campaign raised a record $19.8 million this year by combining donations from Walmart and Discover with donations from customers and five Walmart suppliers: Campbell Soup Company, General Mills, Kellogg Company, The Kraft Heinz Company and PepsiCo. This campaign and many others raise awareness and support for people facing hunger through in-store and online promotion and a variety of media channels.

We worked to improve health outcomes for people struggling with hunger.

Research demonstrates that hunger and health are connected. People who face hunger also face a disproportionately high risk of diet-related diseases, such as diabetes. This year, Feeding America made significant progress toward completing a research trial to better understand how food banks can help people living with diabetes. We anticipate publishing the results in late 2017. We also started two diabetes prevention projects to learn how food bank partnerships with healthcare and community organizations can improve health outcomes for the people we serve.

Additionally, we launched HungerandHealth.org to help people learn about and respond to hunger and health issues in their communities. The website includes an overview of how Feeding America is fighting hunger and promoting health, and serves as a one-stop-shop for healthy recipes, educational resources and programmatic materials for the public and professionals alike.

Feeding America also built on the findings of our “nudges” research. Last year, we partnered with Cornell University on a research project that determined that “nudge” interventions such as signage and product placement helped increase selection of healthy options at food pantries. We integrated the research results into our work this year in two key ways. We helped introduce nudges at more food pantries to encourage the people we serve to select more nutritious foods. We also developed new technology partnerships to begin researching how food banks can nudge food pantry managers to order more nutritious food.

GENERATING INSIGHTS AND IMPACT

We conducted research to better understand the face of hunger in America.

In partnership with the Urban Institute, Feeding America released Bringing Teens to the Table and Impossible Choices: Teens and Food Insecurity in America. These studies investigated the often-overlooked topic of teen hunger, highlighting the stigma and shame experienced by teens facing hunger and revealing the adult responsibilities they often assume to secure meals for their families.

In May, we published Map the Meal Gap 2017, the only study that provides food insecurity and county food cost estimates for every county and congressional district across the country. Now in its seventh edition, the analysis determined that no county is free of food insecurity. Additionally, people facing hunger are finding it even more difficult to afford enough food for their families.

We also made significant progress on our Service Insights Initiative, a project that will provide network food banks with a guiding framework for how to responsibly and effectively collect data from the people they serve to improve their offerings. This year we successfully tested a draft version of the framework with a diverse group of food banks. Once finalized, the guiding framework will encourage more food banks to invest in data-gathering technologies that will help them better understand and serve their communities.

GENERATING INSIGHTS AND IMPACT

We worked hard to maximize our impact on people and communities in need.

Serving Seniors. There are 5.4 million seniors struggling with hunger across our country. As the leading provider of meals to older Americans, we demonstrated our commitment to reaching even more seniors in need through developing and launching a new senior hunger strategy. By 2025, our goal is to reach every senior struggling with hunger in America by increasing awareness of senior hunger, enhancing access to meals and services and providing appropriate interventions that help older Americans stay healthy and strong.

Reaching Veterans. Many people who have served our nation face hunger as they struggle to negotiate the complex stages of military life. Recognizing these challenges, Feeding America established a partnership with the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to reach more veterans. By establishing food pantries or scheduling food distributions at VA Medical Centers, food banks have already served more than 6,300 people through this initiative.

Feeding Children. Kids need nutritious food to learn and grow, yet 1 in 6 children in America faces hunger. The Feeding America network nourishes 12 million children each year—more than any other domestic hunger-relief organization. This year, we awarded millions in child hunger grants to network members to enhance their child hunger strategies and programs. As part of the Conagra Child Hunger Corps, we also deployed the sixth cohort of Corps members to food banks to grow their child hunger programs. Feeding America helped provide meals and snacks where children gather and at times when they are most in need through a variety of impactful initiatives.

Alleviating Summer Hunger. Many children and families may struggle with the pain of hunger during the summer, when free or reduced-price school meals are not available. Feeding America supports food banks working to end summer hunger in their communities. We helped network members enhance their summer programs by offering more nutritious foods, developing unique partnerships and sharing insights broadly with other food banks.

Supporting Communities. Collaborating for Clients, Feeding America's collective impact initiative, is helping us understand how food banks and community partners can work together to make measurable progress toward a shared community vision. The five food banks participating in this initiative have strengthened and built on their work, deepening partnerships and refining strategies for improving their communities in areas including health, housing and financial security. They also engaged in a leadership development program called Fuel, Engage, Empower, Drive (FEED) to help them carry out their plans and manage the challenges that often accompany efforts to make lasting and effective change.

Increasing SNAP Access. The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and other anti-hunger programs play a critical role in nourishing households facing hunger. Feeding America helped increase access to SNAP benefits through the Online SNAP Referral Program and the SNAP Application Assistance program. The Online SNAP Referral Program used web-based search ads to connect potential SNAP applicants with application assistance, leading to 15,000 SNAP applications and approximately 11 million meals. By helping food banks learn from each other and improve their work, the SNAP Application Assistance program enabled more than 225 million meals—35 million more than the previous year.

GENERATING INSIGHTS AND IMPACT

We made significant progress on developing our strategy for ending hunger.

Feeding America is committed to not only helping provide meals today, but also decreasing the need for meals tomorrow. This year, we completed two of the three phases mapped out for crafting an “ending hunger” strategy.

In phase one, we studied the problem of hunger to develop an even deeper understanding of the issue and identify areas of opportunity. To do this, we consulted experts, reviewed research and dove into data. We also researched hundreds of population segments, considering how Feeding America could help end hunger for each one. Through our efforts, we were able to narrow our initial focus to helping working families with children increase their assets and income.

In phase two, we studied programs designed to increase household resources and explored the experiences of working families. This included interviewing families we hope to serve and further consulting experts across the country. We learned more about the barriers to families earning sufficient incomes and how to help them weather financial shocks. We also learned more about services that many network members are offering in addition to food distribution, including providing housing assistance and job training.

After many months of exploration, we are increasingly confident in our ability to help set working families on a path to self-sufficiency. We have gained helpful insights from our Collaborating for Clients initiative and through reaching key milestones in our strategy development process.

We will continue solving hunger today for families in need while also seeking to end hunger tomorrow.

WHY I SUPPORT FEEDING AMERICA

Since 2009, Rachael Ray and her Yum-o! organization have joined in the battle against hunger, giving generously to rescue more produce, launch school pantries, provide meals to children and help families hurting from Hurricanes Irma and Maria. Her 9 Million Meals Challenge drew national attention to the reality of hunger in America. She contributes countless hours through our Entertainment Council, including this year writing in USA Today on the problem of food waste. Rachael reaches warmly into the lives of millions and uses this powerful relationship to bring us closer to a hunger-free America.

Rachael's 9 Million Meals Challenge drew national attention to the reality of hunger in America.

A MESSAGE FROM OUR LEADERS

All people deserve access to nutritious food.

This simple statement drives Feeding America's work across the nation. From preventing food waste to feeding families to strengthening federal nutrition programs, our goal is to end hunger in America so everyone has the food they need to thrive.

Thanks to compassionate supporters like you, Feeding America helped provide 4.2 billion meals to people in need this year. We also mobilized a growing number of anti-hunger advocates and gained new insights about hunger. These advances fueled our efforts to impact more lives. With support from the Feeding America network, struggling families from Alaska to Florida received both nourishment and hope to reach for a better day.

The extraordinary gains we have achieved in partnership with our supporters deserve celebration. However, our work is not finished. There are still men, women and children facing hunger in every county in America. As the nation's leading domestic hunger-relief organization, our efforts have proven effective, but we are hungry for an even brighter tomorrow for our neighbors in need.

Feeding America has developed a new long-range strategy that will accelerate our progress toward achieving a hunger-free America. We have examined our environment, asked questions of ourselves and other leaders, and identified challenges and opportunities that will likely impact our work. From this analysis, we developed a new vision and roadmap that will guide our way forward. We will focus on ending hunger today through providing more nutritious meals, ending hunger tomorrow by reducing the need for charitable food assistance and making hunger unacceptable in America by winning over more hearts and minds.

We know that obstacles may stand in our way. Yet we are assured by our track record of success, growth and innovation, built over nearly four decades of providing food and hope to people at risk of hunger.

Thank you for joining us on this meaningful journey—from celebrating our hard-won achievements to laying the groundwork for the future. As we look ahead, we cling to these important truths: Hunger is a solvable problem. There is enough food to feed everyone in need. Together, we can end hunger.
